History of the Catholic Church By Deacon Rajan

The First Crusade had four main armies, amounting to nearly seventy thousand soldiers. The army of the Persians that attacked Greece at the Battle of Thermopylae in the fifth century BC was estimated at 150,000 troops. The army of Alexander the Great as he headed toward India was estimated at 37,000 troops. The army of the first Crusade was certainly the largest army the West had seen in many centuries. They went by different routes (see map below), with the goal of assembling together at Constantinople in August 1096. In fact, the first troops did not arrive until late December 1096, and the rest followed in April and May 1097.
